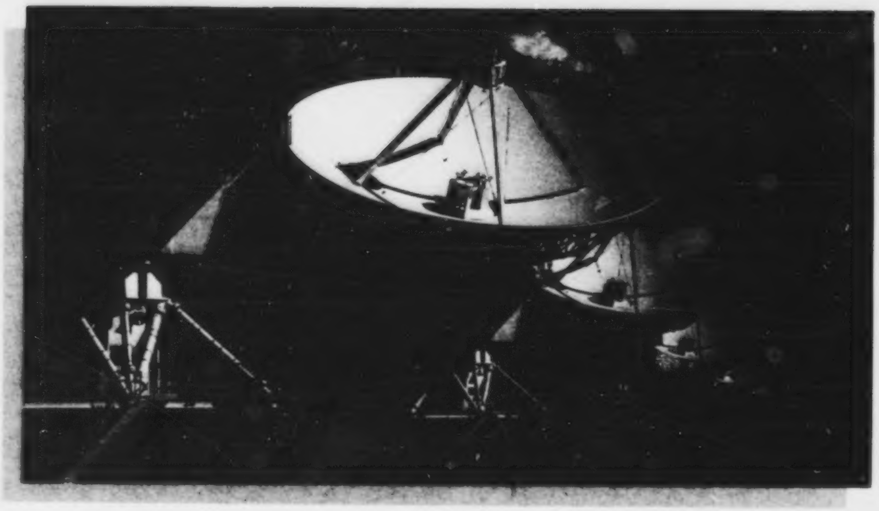
Ontario Manufacturers



This 1988 MADE IN ONTARIO/CANADA Directory catalogues the full extent of Ontario's industry.

It lists over 40,000 Ontario-made products, from sophisticated aerospace components to the common zipper. And cross-references them by manufacturer, providing addresses, phone and fax numbers.

As a roadmap of Ontario industry, it is an invaluable guide for finding a good product source. Or a promising investment opportunity.

But to appreciate the full promise of Ontario, you must look at the technological expertise, the world-class production, the access to affluent markets, and the partnership between government and business found in Ontario.

This is a vast land.

France, the British Isles and West Germany could all fit comfortably within Ontario's borders.

And the opportunities are equally broad.

Between 1975 and 1986, investment in Ontario doubled. The GDP (Gross Domestic Product) has been growing faster than that of any major industrial nation, including Japan.

Business is thriving. In recent years, pre-tax corporate profits have been rising at rates twice those in the United States.

The workforce is young, educated and remarkably dispute-free; over a recent 5-year period 93% to 96% of contract negotiations were settled without work stoppages.

Ontario's industrial heartland is within the boundaries of one of the world's most affluent markets. Over 164 million consumers are within a 2-day drive. In disposable income, Ontario's 9.2 million residents rank 3rd compared to all OECD countries.

World markets are also within easy reach through a sophisticated network of airlines, railways, highways and ocean-accessible waterways.

In technology, Ontario know-how has led the world for years.

As far back as 1894, Alexander Graham Bell invented the telephone in Brantford, Ontario.

In more recent years, Ontario has launched the world's first satellite communications system. Now, the team responsible for the Canadarm on the space shuttle is revolutionizing satellite communications with mobile transmitters no bigger than dinner plates.

Ontario technology is helping build the world's largest fibre optics network across Canada. It has developed the world's first packet switching network for data.

Ontario developed the first electron microscope. The first pacemaker. The Telidon video system. And IMAX cinematography.

The world likewise looks to Ontario for expertise in thermonuclear and hydro-electric power generation, in transportation systems, and automotive aftermarket technology. Some of the largest car-makers turn to Ontario for their injection mould machinery.

This technology has encouraged investment and helped establish Toronto, Ontario's largest city, as an important financial centre.

Toronto is home to the world's 7th largest stock exchange, the headquarters to all but one of Canada's major banks, and 55 foreign banks.

The government of Ontario understands the importance of business. And encourages it.

Through the Ministry of Industry, Trade & Technology (MITT), Ontario is forging links with business and academia. Supporting research and new technology, encouraging new business, and expanding trade relationships.

This 1988 MADE IN ONTARIO/CANADA directory is produced by MITT. Additional data on Ontario industry, or information on MITT services to business, is available from any regional or international MITT office.

Contact the Ministry of Industry, Trade & Technology. You'll discover that this directory is just the opening chapter on the opportunity that awaits in Ontario/Canada.
